THE PORTLAOISE PLANE ALDRITTS MONOPLANE

READ ABOUT IT

The first aeroplane built and flown in what is now the Republic of Ireland was constructed in Portlaoise (then Maryborough) by a family of renowned motor engineers, the Aldritts, Frank, the father and founder of the business, and his sons, Louis, Frank and Joseph. The good news is that it is still in existence and back in Ireland after being housed in a private museum in the south of England and almost forgotten for 40 years. The Portlaoise Plane is a rare aviation artefact but, better still, it has a close connection with Ireland's most famous aviation pioneer, Col. James Fitzmaurice, the co-pilot on the Bremen, the first aircraft to fly the Atlantic east to west in 1928. Fitzmaurice grew up in Portlaoise and received all his formal education in the local CBS, next door to Aldritts' old garage. He later wrote that as a schoolboy he became involved in the plane's construction, with particular mention of his mentor, Louis Aldritt, and it was from this early experience that he first acquired his interest in aeroplanes.
